2. Besides this organization there was a fire brigade of from 60 to 70 firemen, a guard section of 50 men, a secretary, and a typing pool. Other Soviet personnel were Gorenov, the chief engineer, Tolmanov, a mechanical engineer and one girl typist. As of September 1950, there were 80 Korean office employees and 970 Korean manual laborers employed in the Wonsan offices of the Soviet-Korean Oil Company.
3. Every month approximately 20,000 tons of petroleum were shipped to Wonsan from North Sakhalin by way of Vladivostok. The company produced gasoline, kerosene and various types of oils. In May 1949, about 30,000 tons of petroleum were imported from the Soviet Union by four tankers, one of which was the Norwegian ship OSERO (?).
4. The last shipment of petroleum from the Soviet Union was made in April 1950 by three Soviet tankers. The monthly supply was brought by three to four tankers, which would load the processed oil. In this manner 80 percent of the output of the factory went back to the Soviet Union, while the remaining 20 percent was distributed to 112 government controlled North Korean factories.
